INTRODUCTION

Nepal is one of the fastest-growing nations in South Asia. It offers a unique combination of cultural diversity, scenic beauty, and vast economic potential for a variety of sectors, including as hydroelectricity, tourism, and natural resources.

Nepal welcomes international investment in the form of 100% foreign-owned companies or joint ventures with Nepalese investors. The Government of Nepal (“GON”) is very pro-foreign investment with the goal of developing social and economic structures that can offer consistent access to high-quality commodities. Furthermore, the nation strives for political stability, peacekeeping, trade facilitation, and the development of economic capability through sustainable development.

ECONOMIC OVERVIEW

An analysis of the economy shows that the nation is recovering, with a young population, expanding middle class, and expanding market. Although the service sector accounts for the majority of Nepal's gross domestic product ("GDP"), the country's economy is still heavily dependent on agriculture. Nepal's business environment is appealing due to its recovering economic prospects and advantageous placement between two of the world's fastest-growing countries, namely China and India. Palm and soybean oil, woollen carpets, polyester yarn, juices, tea, spices (cardamom), textiles, jute products, ready-made clothes, and other clothing items are among the nation's top exports. As a nation with a labour surplus, Nepal provides skilled, semiskilled, unskilled, and highly skilled labour.

Nepal has direct access to the thriving markets of both China and India, the two most populous countries in the world. Due to its much-reduced import tariffs, Nepal is a desirable destination for international investment. Nepal's natural and cultural resources present investors with a substantial potential.

FOREIGN DIRECT INVESTMENT POLICY

Nepal views foreign direct investment (“FDI”) as an important driver of its economic growth. To foster an atmosphere that is favorable to foreign investors, the government has put in place a number of regulations and reforms.

In an effort to draw foreign direct investments (FDIs) into the nation, Nepal has been adopting a liberal foreign investment policy and working to establish an investor-friendly atmosphere. Nepal welcomes international investment in the form of wholly-owned foreign companies as well as joint ventures with Nepalese investors. The nation has among of the lowest tax slabs in the world and a respectable standing in terms of business accessibility. Hydropower, industrial manufacturing, services, tourism, building, agriculture, minerals, and energy are all profitable investment sectors. To encourage investment in Nepal's promising industries, the government established a high-level Investment Board, which is led by the country's prime minister. Providing investors with one-window facilities is this board's primary goal. The export of labor is another major source of the nation's income, and remittances remain a vital lifeline for the Nepali economy. The economy of Nepal is gradually moving away from agriculture as a result of large-scale rural-to-urban and international migration. Nepal imports a variety of goods each year, including cement, construction equipment, gold, petroleum products, and items for industrial use, mostly from China, India, and Indonesia. With the exception of cottage industries, services, and the armaments and munitions industries, foreign investors are permitted to acquire 100% of a corporation in most areas. Nepal has put in place a number of bilateral agreements to prevent double taxation and safeguard investments. The government increased the NPR 5 million minimum foreign investment requirement to NPR 50 million.

KEY SECTORS

The majority of businesses in Nepal are found in industries including banking & finance, manufacturing, tourism, agriculture, and IT services. These sectors have enormous development potential since they have access to a wealth of people and resources. In addition, the Nepali government has launched a number of programmes to encourage small enterprises and entrepreneurship. It is evident that Nepal offers a plethora of economic prospects for the foreseeable future 2024.

ENERGY

Abundant in water resources, coming from a variety of sources such as groundwater, snowfall from the Himalayas, rainfall, and glaciers. Hydropower has a theoretical potential of about 80,000 MW, of which 43,000 MW are thought to be commercially viable.

TOURISM

Home to the Himalayas, the largest mountain range in the world, and eight of the ten highest peaks in the world, this region is well-liked by hikers, mountaineers, and adventure seekers. Offers stunning lakes, narrow rivers, and gorges, rare animals, historical landmarks, exquisite fine arts, important religious places, and exotic cultures that draw a diverse range of tourists for different purposes.

AGRICULTURE

The economy is mostly reliant on agriculture, which employs over two thirds of the labour force and contributed roughly 24% of the gross domestic product (“GDP”). Arable land makes for around 28% of the total land area. The modernization, diversification, commercialization, and marketing of the agriculture industry are the main concerns of the government. Plans are in place for the government to provide agricultural inputs including irrigation, energy, transportation, and agro-credit.

ADVANTAGES OF DOING BUSINESS

The Nepalese government and private sector organisations have been tackling challenges including financial sector reform, bolstering the private sector's capability, and expediting the private sector's development since the country was designated as a Federal Democratic Republic.

COMPARATIVE ADVANTAGE

Nepal has direct access to the thriving markets of both China and India, the two most populous countries in the world. Due to its much reduced import tariffs, Nepal is a desirable destination for international investment. Nepal's natural and cultural resources present investors with substantial potential.

INVESTMENT CLIMATE IN NEPAL

Nepal welcomes international investment in the form of 100% foreign-owned companies or joint ventures with Nepalese investors. The Government of Nepal ("GON") is very pro-foreign with the goal of developing social and economic structures that can offer consistent access to high-quality commodities. Furthermore, the nation strives for political stability, peacekeeping, trade facilitation, and the development of economic capability through sustainable economic development.

MARKET SIZE AND ACCESSIBILITY

Despite its tiny size and limited market, the nation has substantial access to the main markets in the area thanks to its unique ties with its neighbours. The nation can easily reach the global market. Since Nepal is a part of the World Trade Organization, it benefits from international trade agreements governed by rules.

INDUSTRY

By enhancing the industrial environment, raising productivity and production, expanding employment opportunities, encouraging export-based industries to replace imports, and reducing trade deficits, Nepal's New Industrial Policy draws in both foreign and domestic investors and strengthens the country's balance of payments.

RETURN ON INVESTMENT ("ROI")

Nepal has the lowest tax burden in the area when compared to other South Asian nations. A few explanations for Nepal's relatively strong return on investment.

TYPES OF COMPANIES

Statutory company:

The parliament's special act establishes statutory businesses, and the Act specifies the firms' goals, authorities, and functions. Among the instances are the Nepal Industrial Development Corporation, the Agriculture Development Bank, and the Nepal Rastra Bank.

Company limited by shares:

This kind of business is registered in accordance with the company act's regulations, having a fixed share capital split up into a predetermined number of shares. The face value of the shares that the shareholders have paid for limits their responsibility. These kinds of businesses are rather prevalent these days.

Company limited by guarantee:

A company limited by guarantee is one in which each shareholder agrees to pay a certain amount as a guarantee at the time of the company's winding up. The company's Memorandum of Association contains information on this assurance. Each member may receive a different guarantee amount.

Private company:

According to its Memorandum of Association, this kind of business is restricted to no more than 50 members and is not allowed to sell its shares to the general public. In its name, a private corporation must state that it is private limited ("Pvt. Ltd.").

Public company:

According to its Memorandum of Association, this kind of business has a minimum of seven members, but there is no cap on the total number of shareholders. The public can purchase shares from publicly traded corporations. A public company is governed by authorized capital with which they are registered. The shares of public company are transferable. Public companies are required to use the word limited ("Ltd.") In its name.

Government companies:

The government owns at least 51% of the paid-up share capital in this kind of business.

HOW TO SET UP A BUSINESS

The common procedure to incorporate a business in Nepal involves several key steps and document requirements.

RESERVATION OF COMPANY NAME:

The first step is to reserve the company name at the Office of Company Registrar (“OCR”). The Registrar will only approve names that are unique and not similar to those of existing companies.

SUBMISSION OF DOCUMENTS:

The applicant needs to submit the physical copies of the required documents at the OCR. The documents include the Articles of Association, Memorandum of Association, and other relevant documents.

EXAMINATION AND ISSUANCE:

The submitted documents are examined by the OCR, and upon approval, the company registration certificate is issued.

MINIMUM PAID-UP CAPITAL:

The minimum paid-up capital requirement for a private limited company is NPR 1,00,000.

DOCUMENTARY REQUIREMENTS:

To register a company in Nepal, the applicant must submit foundational documents, including the memorandum and articles of association, any pre-incorporation agreements among promoters, and relevant approvals or licenses required by law. Additionally, documentation confirming the identity and citizenship of Nepalese or foreign promoters and certified copies of incorporation for corporate promoters must also be provided.

TIMEFRAME:

The total time required for online company registration in Nepal for a new company is 7 to 10 days.
